BYUSA forms new support group, students rejoice

Every year hundreds of students at BYU have to deal with a something they never thought could happen to them: being called to a stateside mission. Thousands more carry around the scars of the experience with them for the rest of their lives.

By BILL HOLLIDAY
Uniforce Staff Writer

To help the people affected by this sudden trauma, the office of Student Life together with BYUSA announced the formation of a new support group not only for missionaries who don't leave the USA but also their friends and family members. Social Comfort to Help Inner-State Missionaries (SCHISM) will hold its first meeting on Dec. 18 at 5:30 pm in 170 JSB.

Brian C., who asked that his name not be used, is an example of the trauma these missionaries face. "The bishop of my student ward asked all who had received mission calls to come up during sacrament meeting and say where they were going. The guy ahead of me got called to Russia. Everybody applauded, and a few young women in the front row started loosening their clothing. But when I said, 'Omaha Nebraska,' the whole meeting went silent. My girlfriend dumped me and my friends avoided me, but my parents were really supportive. They said if I didn't write home, they would tell the ward and all the relatives that I was in Bulgaria."

Many people ask themselves, "who sinned, this missionary or his parents, that he got such a boring mission call?" Lisa Mellon-Winchester, a freshman from Scottsdale, Ariz., says, "I wanted to send my missionary off to two years of service in a really exotic-sounding place. When he got called to Vermont, I really had to wonder if he had been true to the promises of his patriarchal blessing. Now I think it's just a case of unfaithfulness in the pre-existence."

The losers in the race for foreign missions face economic disadvantages as well. Whereas many send in their papers hoping for foreign language credit and a sexy career in international relations, English-speaking missionaries face the prospects of gaining skills helpful only in selling life insurance. One of the objectives of the support group is to broaden the career outlook for them. Chossy Offwidth of the career-counseling center says, "many don't realize that there are possibilities besides life insurance, like secretarial work or dental assisting."

opened the envelope and found I had been called to the Little Rock Arkansas mission."

Many missionaries are troubled by the stigma attached to serving in missions usually thought of as "dumping grounds" for missionaries with weak testimonies, chemical addictions, or felony records. In a recent survey of BYU students, 57% responded that they would still love a friend if he didn't go foreign. Over half, however, said it would be a justifiable reason for cancelling an engagement.

The first chairman of SCHISM is Steven L. Christensen, a senior majoring in international law and finance. "If I hadn't been the mission finance secretary in Japan, I would never have made the business contacts I now have," he says. "Right now I'm almost ready to start a leveraged buyout of Honda, and I could never have done it if I had stayed in the US. I feel really sorry for all those poor schmucks—they really don't have much purpose. I just want to help them in whatever way I can."

According to Christensen, the first meeting will be entitled "Forgetting All About It and Moving On," where the discussion will focus on seeing the positive aspects of a US mission. Other discussions will include "Finding A Career With NuSkin," "Temple Marriage: Do I Still Deserve It?" "Faking A Foreign Language," and "Accepting the Terrestrial You."

The disappointment can be the hardest part for many students called to US missions. Nephi Romney, who will enter the MTC on Jan. 20, says, "I was told in my patriarchal blessing that I would be bringing the gospel to people thirsting for it in a land where communism had recently departed. But after three years of studying Albanian, I

What would you do if your friend got hit by lightning?

Hit by lightning? That doesn't happen here. You see, we live in a valley, and lightning only strikes in the mountains.

What if your friend happened to be in the mountains?

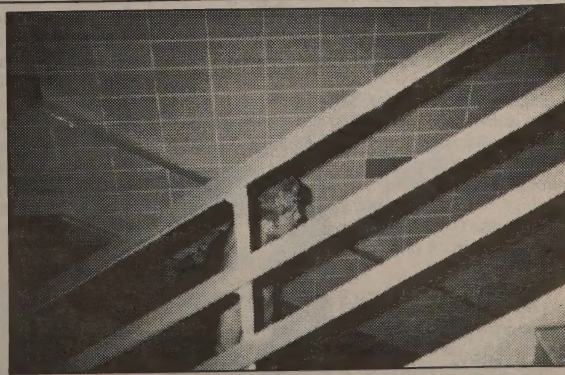

What was he doing up there?

What if he was?

First, I'd tell him that God meant it to happen to him since he was up there in the mountains where he shouldn't have been. And then, well, I'd love him, I guess.

Elderly show greater risk of death

WASHINGTON—A recent study released Wednesday found a strong relationship between growing old and dying.

The study, commissioned by the U.S. Department of Studies, found that people who live to be 90 years old are very likely to die within ten years.

"What we have here is a situation where people are getting old, then dying," said Randall Rockafeller, janitor at the Associated Press.

The study recommends that citizens not live to be 90, because you're more likely to die when you're that old.

Builder's museum a hazard to children

LANSING, MI—A hands-on museum for children was shut down last weekend by Michigan health officials.

The museum, built by the Home Builders Association of America, was designed to give kids an opportunity to "build" a house with some of the real materials that big people use.

The exhibits were deemed unsafe by the Coalition for Child Safety. "Children were mistaking much of the construction material for food," explained Coalition Chairperson Diane Maternelle.

Many parents were relieved to hear the news of the closure. "My little boy was nibbling on the fiberglass insulation, thinking it was cotton candy," said one mother. "Then, when we got home, I caught him brushing his teeth with caulking."

No serious injuries were reported except for a 3-year-old who mistook a nail gun for a Pez dispenser. Despite the controversy, the Home Builders Association plans on opening its next exhibit, Heavy EquipmentLand, as scheduled.

Polygamists consider buying The Colony

PROVO—Negotiations will take place throughout this week between the current owners of The Colony apartments and interested polygamist investors.

The Colony is considered ideal property by local polygamist leaders because it is self-contained and has great wards. Their plans involve making The Colony a fully polygamous community and including utilities with the rent.

Hello, my name is Dale E. Uniforce. I come from another planet! I have been sent here to observe you earth people. After several days on this thing you call a university campus, I must say you are all very wacky. Let me tell you what happened to me this, uh, weekend, yeah, that's the word.

I was at the Riveria with some of my new earth friends and we were looking for something to do. My earth friends are very nice and have been trying to show me a good time during my stay here amongst the, what's the word?, zoobies. They had already taken me up to the "Y" and showed me how to sneak into this thing they called "dollar movies." Evan, one of my friends, told me they had run out of things to show me. After a while, he got a smirk on his face and said it would be funny to see me "toasted." Hmmm, "toasted", I wonder what that means.

Evan explained to me that he and his friend Timmy, could get toasted with me because they attended something they called UVCC. With that, Timmy and Evan put me in their transportation device called "car." What a silly thing it was! It moved on the ground on things called wheels. It even had a small replica of a tree hanging from an object that reflected light. We took the car to a place they called "LeMars." Have I mentioned that I'm from another planet?

Well, we got into LeMars, but not before we got past the man they called a "bouncer." It seems the man thought my "interplanet ID" was fake. On my home planet, my name is spelled Dale E. Uniforce and Lou The Bouncer thought it was some kind of joke. But after Evan and Timmy told him I was from outer space, and offered to buy him a couple things they called "brewskis", we got in.

Evan and Timmy sat me down, Timmy said some strange words. "Hey Taffy, get the Martian a Bud!" Timmy got a "Bud" for himself and Evan too. While I was trying to figure out how to get the "Bud" through my glass helmet, I noticed one of those things you call "women" sitting across the room. She was very pretty. Oh yeah, did you know that I'm from another planet?

After some hesitation, I walked up to the woman and said some words that Evan and Timmy told me to say. "Hey sweet cheeks, I'm burnin' for ya!" I said. Evan and Timmy began to laugh very hard. She looked at me in a strange way, so I used another sentence I had just been taught. "Baby, baby, baby! This is my last night on this planet. Do you want to see what's under this helmet?" Evan and Timmy were on the floor. They were making those laughing noises again and strange liquids were coming from their eyes.

After a few earth minutes, a big man named Jud walked up to me and said some very bad words to me. Jud was what you earth people call a "redneck." He asked me why I was "hittin' on his filly." I still have no idea what he was talking about. I looked around for Evan and Timmy, but they were nowhere to be found. Before I knew what was happening Jud started to hit me with what I heard somebody call a "Louisville Slugger." He hit me on the helmet, but he didn't realize it was made of a special shatter-proof glass. This made Jud mad. "Get out of here, you stupid space suit person!" he said, followed by more bad words. Then he hit me again with the "Slugger."

Just then, Lou The Bouncer grabbed me and threw me out the front door. He told me to "take my Martian bit somewhere else." As I started walking home, Evan and Timmy drove by and picked me up. They said they forgot they left something called an iron on at their apartment and had to go home and turn it off. They took me back home and told me how much fun I was. Have I mentioned that I'm from another planet?

Well, I never did figure out what "toasted" was, but perhaps I can find out in some place more friendly than LeMars. Perhaps the Cougarat.

A Voice in the Wilkinson

Thursday's lunch hour in the Cougarreat was interrupted by the appearance of an unidentified shouting camel.

By GRAHAM WINKMAN
Uniforce Staff Writer

Brad Holcomb a Junior majoring in Botany from Bountiful, Utah said "I just thought they were having another one of those livestock shows and I ignored it, until the camel started shouting something."

According to police reports, the camel began shouting in a "loud raspy voice." The students sitting in the Cougarreat were instructed to repent and change their evil ways, said the report. The camel continued shouting until University Police arrived on the scene at which time the camel disappeared into the quad.

No trace of the camel has been found and University Police are continuing to search for what has now been termed "The Repentance Camel".

The camels short but eventful appearance seemed to have an effect on many of the students present.

Bonnie Washington a sophomore from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania majoring in psychology said "I've been doing a lot of things I shouldn't have been doing lately and I consider this a sign that it is time to change. The Repentance Camel changed my life".

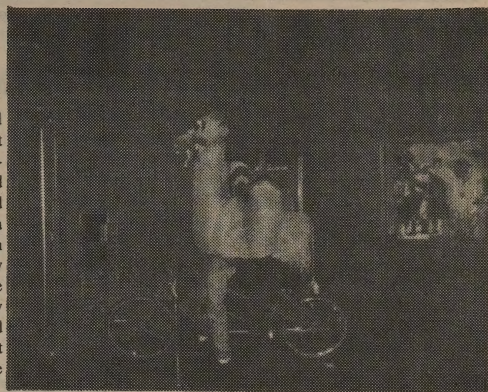

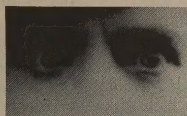

Randy Gondorf a Senior from Billings, Montana majoring in Chemical Engineering said "after the camel disappeared everyone in the Cougarreat looked so much happier, there was a sense of brotherhood that I had never seen before in the Cougarreat".

Administration has refused to comment on the incident, but Hugh Nibley a professor of religion and Bible scholar called the Uniforce offices and said "the camel has long been a symbol of the ancient Jewish culture and their nomadic way of life. The appearance of the camel would seem to signify that we have become stale and stagnant in our ways and are not willing to move ahead as the nomads".

Since the initial sighting a week ago there have been many sightings of the Repentance Camel all over campus (see chart.)

University police have offered a $500 reward for any information leading to the arrest

The Repentance Camel was seen riding a tandem and warning students in the Wilkinson Center of the days to come.

Everything is easily explained, according to Milktoast

by RAMEN NUDEL
Uniforce Staff Writer

In the face of massive recent controversy over a number of subjects in the BYU community, Bob Milktoast, Dean of the Department of Good, has developed and made available a series of printed pamphlets stating the "official" position on a number of subjects.

Explains Milktoast, "People at BYU are just arguing too much. Look around you—everywhere people are engaging in exciting and challenging discussion about all sorts of topics, from who really should have received the Nobel Peace Prize to which is really the tastiest low fat dressing."

"Yes, there always seems to be a lot of discussion going on here," said Pippi Washout, 20, a junior from Provo, Utah in folk music studies. "It scares me. Sometimes people even make hand gestures or raise their voices."

There is a solution, according to Milktoast. "If we turn to the words of Church authorities, we will find out that every question has just one answer."

Milktoast, along with history professor Carl Marlboro and communications professor Hurt Buxom, have spent a good five months culling the most obscure church documents and pioneer journals they could find.

"We've written the book on just about everything," says Milktoast.

For example, in a pamphlet called, "What music do I listen to on Sunday?" the pamphlet quotes N. Eldon Tanner during the 1976 April Conference. Tanner said, "We will now be favored by a number from the choir."

"With that kind of evidence," says Milktoast, "who can argue?"

Other pamphlets answer the questions: "Which brand of planner should I use: Franklin or Covey?", "How do I know when it's really a revelation to marry someone or just burning in my loins?", "How should I taper my pants?", "What width lapel is pleasing unto the Good?", and "When it comes to eye contact, how long is too long?"

Other pamphlets include "How do I build a BYU-approved box girder bridge?", "Is Cain really Bigfoot?", and "Am I a feminist?"

Pamphlets are available in the library.

A recently released statement by the University Coalition on Standards Enforcement revealed the University's plan to update many of the statues on BYU campus. The long awaited plan involves a joint venture between the Coalition and the BYU Construction Committee to bring the statues more inline with University policy as well as Church doctrine. Bruce Hafen, University Provost, majoring in Interdenominational University Studies, stated that, "The project would have begun much sooner if the BYU Construction Committee had not been so overwhelmed with the recent extensive sidewalk construction." In addition to the statements by Hafen, Coalition spokeswoman, Leslie Anell, remarked that, "The campus statues should serve as models to the students. Students should be able to look to them as examples and exact from them renewed resolution in their academic and religious goals as they walk to class each day." The priority alteration, according to Anell, is the addition of wedding bands on the fingers of the parents just outside the Spencer W. Kimball Tower. "We are appalled that such a major and consequential detail was omitted in the first place!" said Anell. Garment lines and "eternal smiles" are also being considered on the same couple. Next on the agenda is a complete overhaul of the Lamanite standing at the west end of the library. "[His] loin cloth and hair will be brought into compliance with the Honor Code," said Anell, adding, "With the change in the Honor Code, socks will no longer be required. And the pipe will be replaced with a football." Rex E. Lee could not be reached for comment.

Working on the grounds crew can be a spiritual experience

By BRITTNEY J. CREW Uniforce Staff Writer

Tired of the stigma that sometimes accompanies the words "grounds crew," Troy Peterman, head of the BYU Grounds, has decided to change its image. "We found that many of our employees were coming to us in a last-ditch effort to find a job. We were noticing more and more of them were crouching down in the back of our trucks while driving through campus and many of them asked that we mail their checks to them under a pseudonym." Concerned with this slump in morale, Peterman called a meeting with all of his foreman and together they reached a solution: Zen.

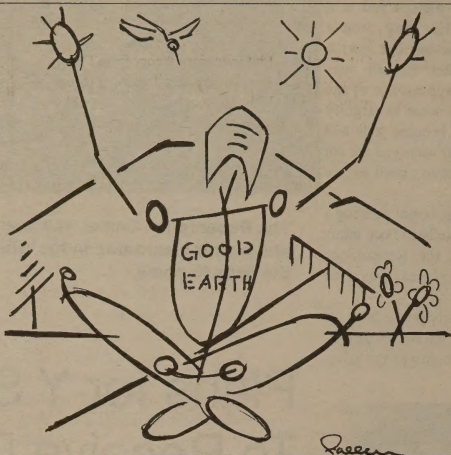

"Normally I don't go for that hippie junk," Peterman said. "But in this case, I can really see wholistic benefits from the changes we've made. I even went down to The Good Earth and bought some patchouli."

for about two hours and allowed our inner spiritual essence to take over. When we were finished, I felt that the patterns in the dirt spoke to me of a new direction, a more synthe sized existence."

Other "Zen Crew" (as it is coming to be known) activities include: raking with the right brain, making tree rings while Grounds crew members themselves are finding their jobs to be more spiritually fulfilling.

Suzi "Rainbowe" Stark, 19, a philosophy major from Birchwood, Minnesota, said, "The techniques that they've taught me have really helped me in rising to a higher spiritual plane. Last week we raked dirt levitating, and semi-conscious snow removal.

Jacob "River" Smith says of the new program, "I think it really fits in well with the whole idea of grounds crew. After all, like Buddha said, 'Life is suffering.'"

COLLEGE FASCISTS GET OUT THE VOTE

Increasing voter awareness has never been easy. College Fascists, in an unselfish effort to boost voter awareness, recently helped students register for the November elections. As an additional bonus, many of those students unknowingly had their residency changed to Utah, even though they were assured by College Fascist representatives that their residency would remain unaltered. One student, Ken Mattel, a Junior majoring in Fashion Design and Heterosexual studies from Redondo Beach, California, said "I find this very upsetting. This means that I have to go to the University of Utah for a master's. I hate red. I'm not even an autumn." In response, College Fascist representative Andrew "Boots" Grinchustafson, a freshman majoring in Elective Brain Surgery from Czechoslovakia, said "Hey, we were just helping with the glorious task of public education, in the fine tradition of other educators like Stalin or Lenin. This country has a wonderful tradition of creative voting practices dating back to Tricky Dick Nixon himself. Besides, Utah is a pretty, great state." The Conservative Edge was unavailable for comment

TRAFFIC POLICE FOIL MOTORISTS WITH LIFE-LIKE MANNEQUIN

Impatient drivers now have a new worry on their hands: "Bob" the traffic mannequin. Developed several years ago by Lifelike inc. to meet the growing need for low-level administrators in the public and private sector, "Bob" the traffic mannequin is placed in patrol cars around campus to encourage students to drive more slowly. "It's wonderful," said Benito Mussolini Jorgensen, traffic services supervisor, "we can expand our influence on campus without raising our budget." The life-like mannequins are being used to meet other needs on campus as well. Isaac Asimov Hansen, President of Lifelike inc. explains: "They're selling like hotcakes! The grounds department has purchased several hundred to replace students in the spring, and the library has purchased two to serve as door attendants. The Humanities department is considering using them to ease the teaching burdens of several tenured professors, allowing them to do more research." The Conservative Edge was unavailable for comment

BYU SPOUSES SUPPORT
ATHLETES

Trying to balance the roles of student and homemaker isn't always easy, especially with the added difficulties of supporting an athlete. Often, spouses must learn special skills in order to deal with the unique circumstances of the athlete-spouse. John Steinbeck, a sophomore majoring in Family Science from Monterey, California, explains: "When my wife, Heather gets home from a workout with the synchronized swim team, I try to have a protein-rich, cost-effective meal prepared. Tonight we're having tofu suprise. I made the tofu myself from beans that I grew this summer on the porch outside our beautiful Wymount apartment. The added sunlight from our freshly waxed and polished sidewalks extended our growing season by 30 days. Also, one of the 35 helpful grounds crew members assigned to weed the bushes in front of our place was able to give me tips on increasing yields and cultivating naturally insect-resistant strains, so that I can avoid using harmful insecticides around our 8 children." Heather Steinbeck, a Senior majoring in Oil Exploration with a minor in T h i r d - World studies, says "I don't know what I'd do without the little man.

After a grueling 4 hour workout in the pool with our coach, Helga Bilgewater screaming at us to keep our toes pointed, it's a wonder I can even walk out to my car to drive home. If I didn't have little Johnny to massage my feet and raise our 8 kids while I got my degree, I don't know what I'd do." Delores Denuncio, a full-time scavenging specialist from the West-side Reams underpass with a Phd in literary theory from Duke said "They don't require those kids to work nearly enough. Twenty hours of practice a week is nothing. It's about time we did away with the grandiose spectacle of paternalistic, ritualized warfare that enforces negative cultural stereotypes and enslaves the proletariat to the hegemonic psuedo-religion that organized college athletics has become. Hey, nice shoes."

new apple treatment center to be opened

By TITO POLANSKI
Uniforce staff writer

A small meeting was held yesterday at the BYU Food Services office to make final preparations for the new apple treatment center.

Over the past year, the number of sicknesses reported as a result of unclean apples from the Cougar eat rose 80 percent, according to University Police reports.

Food Service representative

Larry Macintosh, a 57 year old father of five from Orem, Utah who has one son on a mission to Japan and a daughter who is engaged, and who majored in Physics of Lard at the University of Butte, said "Many apples are sprayed with harmful chemicals and retain some of dangerous toxins when we receive them. Just rubbing them on your shirt won't get them off.

"The new center will be a place where apples can go, be washed, and receive a special treatment to make them safe for everyone." said Macintosh

Upon announcement of the new center, a small group of arise."

Jackie Delicious, an 18 year old freshman majoring in food sciences from Casper, Wyoming, has worked on getting an apple center for three years.

She was very upset when told about the protesters. Said Delicious, "oranges just don't have the same type problems that apples do, and a center for the oranges would be of little use since most people don't eat the rinds."

Rocket scientist Craig McCreary, when asked to comment on the debate, said, "people just have to understand that such comparisons can't be made, I mean it's like trying to compare apples and oranges."

The protesters finally gave up and decided they were being very silly and foolish. The center will go up early next year.

protesters gathered outside the food service offices carrying signs that demanded equal treatment for oranges.

The leader of the protest Randy Lustofen said "If the apples get a treatment center there's no reason why the oranges shouldn't get one too. Oranges get sprayed just like apples and if they don't receive the same type treatment center, the same type of problems will

new policy stirs controversy

By RAYMOND WHITNEY

A new policy announced yesterday gave rise to heated controversy across campus.

The policy, which will go into effect at the start of winter semester, was described by administrator Norbert Sleet as "good." "This policy has been needed for many years, if students just look at it objectively they will understand its importance," said Sleet.

BYUSA representative Bob Hurlbut, a 22 year old senior majoring in Sociology from Ontario, Oregon said, "This is a great policy and if we work together as a student body we can make it work for everyone."

Not everyone greeted the policy with open arms. Tip Bowerman, 55, a junior majoring in recreation management from Fresno, California said "this is totally stupid."

Nancy Lefter a teacher of psychology said "I just wish we could have had more say in the matter, if only they had given us a chance to talk about it before they instituted it."

Georgia Foster, a 19 year old graduate student from Kerns, Utah, and a representative of SAC said "This is an outrage. We have numbers that indicate over 70 percent of the student population was opposed to this policy."

Hurlbut claims SAC's numbers are inaccurate and are nothing more than a ploy to Make BYUSA look bad. "Our numbers indicate that no more than 67 percent of students opposed the policy."

Foster claimed Hurlbut was a "slimy weasel" and "no better than a two-headed aardvark from Rexburg." Foster refused to clarify his statements.

Opinions Can Sometimes Be Good

Reports of the controversy which arose in response to the editorial printed on this page on September 17, 1988 ("Feeding the Starving Might Have A Couple of Advantages, Study Shows") have recently reached the highest levels of the university administration, and have been responded to by fax.

We're glad. We're glad we belong to a Church university—heck, a whole Church!—that can casually employ modern technological devices like fax machines without giving in to the pressure to modernize attitudes like some other Christian denominations (like the Church of England) that we could mention, but won't.

And we feel good about that too.

But the point is, opinions are great, sometimes.

We should be grateful we live in a county where there are so many opinions on various subjects of importance. The Daily Uniforce is proud to be a participant in the opinion-making business.

Not that opinions are really that important! Because, you know, sometimes opinions are wrong, and sometimes they bother people.

When that happens, you've stirred up controversy, which means it's time to back down before public pressure and support the status-quo. (Right!)

And The Daily Uniforce stands behind that 100 percent, with reservations.

We need to recognize that the only way for free thought and dialogue to lead us to the truth is to sometimes stand up and take a stand and stand for change. Which is why we oppose the whole opinion-making business, except when a great amount (say, twelve minutes) of fasting and prayer and copying from other magazines and discussion with friends over bagels about sex goes into it beforehand.

And this is something everyone can do.

Not that we're endorsing bagels here, though some people like them with certain spreadings and others don't like them at all. There's always room for differences here at BYU.

So, once again, the point is, that when a movie or university policy or multicultural hairstyle or presidential candidate or rule of grammar confuses us, you can be certain The Daily Uniforce will come right out and say, "Hey, maybe this is a good thing, maybe it isn't." And you can fax us your comments.

Because there is really only a few things a newspaper should be afraid to say, as long as it knows what the hell it's talking about. (But that's just our opinion, so, I mean, no hard feelings, right?)

This editorial is the opinion of The Daily Uniforce Editorial Board, which strives to replicate the breadth and diversity of intellectual experience at our campus. Accordingly, the Board includes several white males from different Utah counties, as well as some agreeable token minorities from other places. The opinions of the Board are subject to the highest intellectual standards, frequently involving upwards of the aforementioned twelve minutes of research, and sometimes even a rough draft. The Uniforce Opinions are not necessarily those of this university, or any known university, or any known universe, or any rocket scientist who studies the universe, or any of us for that matter. We just do this to get people thinkin', ya know? The Editorial Board meets weekly at 4:18 p.m. on Saturdays for a little while for crackers and cheese dip in a hidden closet at Big Bob Bollinger's house down by the train tracks. All meetings are open to the public, and we almost always remember to unlock the door.

A Stupid Complaint

Dear Mr. Editor:

Rex Lee says we need to graduate in four years. Four years? 4 years?! Four Years!! FOUR years?! Four years?!? FOUR years?! Four YEARS!!! 4 YEARS?!?!? He said four years?!?!?! He really said FOUR WHOLE YEARS?!?! I can't believe he means FOUR years??

I mean, four YEARS is FOUR YEARS!! Four Years? Four Years? Four Freaking Years?!!?

A Smart-Alek Reply

Dear Mr. Editor:

Tell Mote to get a life. If he can't figure out how to graduate summa cum laud in four years while being BYUSA president and playing professional golf, then get into a good Church-approved graduate program studying a profitable, life-affirming subject matter, make $80,000 a year, and still marry a fine, strong-willed, beautiful woman and raise up some swell progeny, then he's not going to have much to contribute to BYU as an alumnus, so what should Rex care?

Nutcases Protecting Womanhood

Dear Mr. Editor:

I was standing near the U.S. flag when a young lady came by, with both her ankles and ears were uncovered. I immediately untied the rope for the flag, brought down our title of liberty, and threw the sacred cloth over this misguided daughter of Zion, so as to prevent any possible temptation of the noble bretheren of the priesthood. I realize that this may seem like an extreme action, but as a recent transfer student from Orville Rickenbaucher's ("Rick's") Institutional Seminary, I have become more and more stressed by the plain disregard for the words of the prophets shown by the students of this Mt. Everest of a University. When I saw this precious delicate stretching blooming budding flower of womanhood so wantonly exposing her erogenous zones to the world, I knew that nothing less than immediate coverage was required. The BYU police, I am sad to say, did not see things the same way—perhaps their long exposure to the wickedness which is deceiving the very elect here in the valley in the shadow of the mountains of Ephraim has injured them. But, forgiving my hysteria, I still don't see why they thought the billy clubs were necessary. I am very sorry to the marks the young lady's make-up left on the flag, and plan to wash them out as soon as they let me out of this box in the ASB. So, anyway, I'm writing to see if anyone would bother running to my apartment (Victoria Place #35) to see if the bishop has left any messages on the machine. I'm expecting a calling.

Putting the Nutcase in His Place

Dear Mr. Editor:

Tell Zenock to get a life. As if anybody here really cares what caused him to rip down a national symbol to pursue his own personal spiritual agenda in the face of contradictory university policy and describe it all in a maudlin space-wasting letter to this crappy ad flyer with all the cheap, back-issues-of-The Friend, pseudo-religious phrases possible.

Hate that Smart-Alek Foreigner

Dear Mr. Editor:

What the hell is this? Are you going to turn the whole damn letter page over to our arrogant Hungarian friend every day? Since when should he get the last word on everybody's troubles? What do you think he is: God? Ha! Let mer tell you, he's an world-class jerk! You stink, Skip, you and your whole damn country! You think you can just come over here on some brainless water polo scholarship and steal my girlfriend and marry her and then set yourself up as some holier-than-thou emotional censor over the trials of this fine university which your immigrant Slavic convert-to-the-Church presence pollutes? Go back to your own kind!

Don't Let Up On That "X" Guy

Dear Editor:

I don't think you went far enough in your recent editorial on Malcolm X. My uncle was in the FBI, and he told me that he knows for a fact that Mr. X had illicit relations with women to whom he was not married. How can you admire anyone like that? No one can make such an accusation against those men of God, our Founding Fathers—men like Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson. Besides that, Malcolm X owned slaves! There's proof! So there.

James B. Spitz, Jr.

The Daily Uniforce is an open forum that delights in intelligent, well-thought-out, responsible, sophisticated letters, both critical and complimentary. But since we almost never get any of those, we run this tripe. We wish we had the guts to turn down those weekly letters from various paranoids who write in about the Last Days and the socialism of public television, but it's either that or solicit more viewpoints, which is always a real pain. Letters should include name, social security number and zodiac sign, so we can pray and see if your letter should be printed.

Utah Jazz rated best NBA team ever

By JACQUE STRAPPE
Uniforce Staff Writer

On Friday night, our own BYU-sponsored Utah Jazz demoralized the Boston Celtics by an outrageous score of 101-99. As most sports fans know, the Celtics have won more NBA championships than any team ever, possibly four or five of them, so by beating them, we become the best team ever. I got into game free with my press pass and had really good seats. I didn't get to see much of the game because those darn lines for the hot dogs are so flippin' long, but I was able to talk with the Jazz coach Frank Layden while standing in line. I did manage to see the most exciting part of the game though. Karrul Malone of the Jazz got in a really cool fight with a mean Celtic player. I love those fights in the NBA. One other cool play was when a short guy named Dee Brown for the Celtics did a dunk that BYU's center Gary Trost made famous. He covered his eyes and slammed it. I've never heard of the guy before, but if he entered a slam dunk contest he might do pretty good, and remember, you heard it here first at the Daily Universe.

Another awesome thing was when I got to go in the locker room after the game. I asked Karrul "the mail carrier" Malone how many points he scored. He said, and I quote, "I don't know." I asked our gold medalist John Stockton (who by the way is a member of the Church I think) John, why do you think Larry Bird didn't really get into the flow of the game? He said, "He retired you fool, are you a Daily Universe reporter?" Pretty cool eh, he knows who I am. I tried to get a hold of a fan favorite Thurl Bailey, but apparently he was unavailable for comment.

Next, I went to the Celtic locker room to talk to the four BYU alumni on their team. I especially wanted to talk to Danny Ainge, but when I tried to get in, they said something about the Daily Universe being ignorant. I told them they were getting us mixed up with the Student Review sports section, but then I saw Greg Schell and Mike Sponseller from SR interviewing some guy named Reggie Lewis so I was a little confused.

I was able to get comments from two of the top NBA experts in all of Utah though. Lavar Durrant, assistant coach for the Provo High JV team said, "The Jazz are the greatest team of all time, and believe me, I know my basketball." Rollie Bestor, head of extramural sports for BYU said, "The Jazz are super cool, the best. I especially like the really tall white guy with the beard." There you have it, the Jazz are the best ever, and we here at the Universe will continue our commitment of only covering them in our sports section.

kissing for glory

For those who did not get the chance to witness the intramural Kissing Rugby Championship, I feel for you. It was so dang intense. There was plenty of rip-roarin' action that the whole family could enjoy. The final round was held before

Powder Puffs and the Wanna B's. This one had all that you could ask for. It was good all the way up to the nail-biting end. The Puffs showed real concentration in the closing round, when they went in trailing by three points. The deciding factor in this match was the over all appearance of the B's. They fielded a team of select babes and studs, and in the end it proved Seth Dogood, captain of the Kids said, "We just weren't mentally focused. They showed superior skills and towards the end of the match we conceded to them. It was kinda nice being kissed anyway. It doesn't happen everyday, you know."

a crowd of 13,234 in the Marriot Center on Saturday.

In the 4-A Division it was a the Kissing Killers all over the Slick Willie's Kids team. There was complete domination on the part of the Killers, as they were heavily favored to win. The Killers had an average weight of 206 pounds to the Kids 180. Not only that, but they exhibited an overall team quickness and agility. The Kids just could not seem to outrun the Killers when they were on the defensive and therefore ended up a distant second. Seth Dogood, captain of the Kids said, "We just weren't mentally focused. They showed superior skills and towards the end of the match we conceded to them. It was kinda nice being kissed anyway. It doesn't happen everyday, you know." The final score was 14-7.

In the 3-A Division it was a showdown between the their downfall. Tiffany Spoilbrat of the B's told me, "It was a close one. If we weren't so doggone good-looking then things might have been different. The Puffs couldn't lay off once the adrenaline started flowing." The final was 12-11.

Finally, there was disappointment in the 2-A Division final. The Nerds R Us crew took a victory in a forfeit over Lipps, Inc. When confronted as to why their team forfeited, Lipps captain Al Koholic said, "Did you see those guys? They were all pizza-faced freshpersons. Who wants to subject their lips to that kind of punishment?" This reporter found that remark highly offensive, but I couldn't really think of anything else to write.

Stay tuned next week when I go undercover to find out more about the weight room music policy.

Editor's Note

You'll forgive me for making this short and sweet, but this week I don't have much to comment on. I have found that the demands of a sports editor are really overbearing. In fact, I have had to take some desperate measures to keep things interesting lately. As a result, I have found myself turning to those zany sports guys over at the Student Review for help. I have been guilty of stealing thunder from them. You can't blame me though, they really are good. I hope they can forgive me this trespass.

Alone in the world

A cipher was seen lying face down in the snow as hundreds of unsuspecting students passed by.

OUT OF CONTROL!

Peter Pucksley a Junior majoring in orienteering lost control driving on campus yesterday. He did survive his drive, escaping with only one major head injury.

POLICE BEAT

Ungentleman-like Conduct

Last Tuesday, a man entering the JKHB neglected to hold the door open for a woman who was walking closely behind him. The suspect later admitted to having committed the inappropriate act when confronted by University Police. He further confessed to not doing his home teaching for the past two months. The perpetrator was given a $100 citation.

Theft

Two students were apprehended by University Police as they left the CougarEat last Monday. The officers had seen them take a stack of napkins on their way out. When questioned, they claimed that they were both suffering from runny noses and that they planned on using the napkins instead of Kleenex during their next class. The napkins were counted and the number taken was deemed excessive. The students were asked to put some of the napkins back and were each given a $50 citation.

Suspicious Livestock

Last Friday, a camel was reported to have been crying. "Repent, repent!" to students studying on the fifth floor of the library. The camel was described as having a "goofy smile," a loud, raspy voice, and two humps on its back. Campus Police were unable to stop the camel before it could escape. Campus authorities have no possible leads or motivations as of yet.

CLUBNOTS

The Clubnots column is for announcements for BYU clubs. If you're not a BYU sponsored club, dont even think of trying to put your announcement here.

STUDENTS OF OTHER STATES

From somewhere other than Utah? Then join students like yourselves every Tuesday at HGB 1124 at 6:00 pm. This week's topic: "How to keep your out-of-state licence current while at BYU. (California and Idaho residents need not attend.)"

ANDREW GUSTAFSON CLUB

If you think he's getting a bad rap in this miserable paper, make your voice heard! We meet at the RB Men's locker room every Friday and Saturday night. No women allowed.

QUIRK

Club for seriously weird people. Meets each Tuesday at 3:30 am on the 12th floor of the SWKT. Come join us, if you dare!

BRAIN SURGERY CLUB

Want to perform complicated surgery on other people without all that pesky schooling? Come cut with us! We meet every 3rd Wednesday in the Clyde Building. Bring a friend, if you get my drift.

DESPERATE JUNIOR MALE CLUB

We're back and more desperate than ever! Still seeking attractive and outgoing females to line up with club members. For more information, call Cutler or Doug at 373-7690. Quality references provided.

HEAD INJURIES ANONYMOUS

If you have an embarrassing head wound and you just don't know where to go, come talk with the rest of us on Thursday nights in the Basement of the HFAC at 7:00. This week we'll discuss headwear that hides but doesn't hurt.

THUMB WAR CLUB

Meet in the step down lounge at 5:00 on Tuesday for non-stop thumb wrestling till midnight, prizes and refreshments!

BUSH DEFEAT SUPPORT GROUP

Club for those still mourning the loss of our great leader. Let the healing begin this Saturday at 7:00 am in the ELWC Steppedown lounge. This week: "Learning to wear a color other than black." Next Week: "What if the world doesn't end next January 21st?"

HAPPINESS CLUB

Meets every day at 3:21 pm at JKHB 1132. Help us "scatter sunshine" across BYU. Our motto: "If you're feeling crappy, shut up and be happy!"

"HEY, IT'S COLD OUTSIDE" CLUB

Helping students dress for the weather. Put away the shorts and join us this Friday as we take our first field trip to Eddie Bauer. Meet in the SFH parking at 2:00 pm.

MEN-WHO-LOVE-DISNEY CLUB

Tired of the menacing stares? Sick of being called "sensitive boy?" Meet with guys who just love good, wholesome animation. This Tuesday come to our private screening of Aladdin, bring a date. Also, be sure not to miss the long-awaited debate: Who's hotter, Cinderella, Sleeping Beauty, or Ariel?

UNHAPPINESS CLUB

Join us Wednesday outside the JKHB as we beat the snot out of the Happiness Club. Help "scatter happiness" across BYU.

New Hill Cumorah Nears Completion

In an effort to restore church roots and values to campus living, BYU has begun rebuilding historical church sites on campus. BYU feels these replicas will greatly enhance the spiritual lives, hemlines, and length of shorts of it's students.

By DONNY SNYDER
Uniforce Construction
Editor

Construction on the New Hill Cumorah just north of the newly completed JSB nears completion as the mound of dirt rises according to schedule. BYU, in a new found fondness of mounds as evidenced by the recently completed renovation of the previously flat and barren waste land between the RB and the SFH, has decided to build a scaled replica of the original Hill Cumorah found somewhere in up-state New York. University officials were unsure what to do with the site of the old JSB until the Religion Department, in a joint venture with the BYU Construction Committe and the associate dean of religion, majoring in International Business Psychology and Humanities, said "We wanted to do something along the lines of the miniature sacred grove located inside the new JSB."

McKonkie, associate dean of religion, majoring in International Business Psychology and Humanities, said "We wanted to do something along the lines of the miniature sacred grove located inside the new JSB." McKonkie was referring to the atrium located in the center of the JSB which the BYU Horticulture In Theology Club has taken over in a joint project with the BYU Ground Screw in an effort to recreate the vegetation and atmosphere of the original sacred grove located in either Pennsylvania or up-state New York. McKonkie said the New Cumorah would serve as a
